MARCUS JUNIUS BRUTUS

After the death of Brutus and Cassius, there was no longer any army loyal to the Republic; Sextus Pompey (son & heir of Pompey the Great) had been crushed at Sicily, and, with LEPIDUS deposed and ANTONY ^{30 BC} dead, not even the Julian Faction had any leader left except Octavian Caesar. Then, laying aside the title of triumvir and passing as a consul, and professing himself satisfied with the tribunician power for the protection with gifts, the people with grain, and all men with the achievement of peace, and gradually gave in power, concentrating in his own hands the functions of the senate, magistrates, and the law.

No one opposed him. At home, all was peaceful, the official line the same title as before. Their few men still alive who had seen the Republic; Thus the constitution had been transformed, and there was nothing as all left of the good old way of life. Stagnant of equality, all looked to the direction of the principles with no opposition for the future.
